Fish protein concentrate--FPC--was widely publicized during the late 1960s as the most promising of a number of "technological fixes" for ridding mankind of the curse of malnutrition. FPC, a stable protein supplement of high nutritive value and low caloric content prepared from whole, edible-grade fish. Includes bibliographical references (pages 233-254) and index. Abstract. Fish protein concentrate. Relevance of technological applications to malnutrition. Experience with the development of FPC reveals that this product did not possess the capacity to alleviate malnutrition, even as it was then denuded. This is not to suggest that FPC did not fulfill other, less emphasized objectives.
